INTRODUCTION

Statistics represent useful data that can be compared, manipulated and interpreted into meaningful and necessary information for planning and decision-making. Unfortunately, the statistical gathering and development process is not as cut and dried as it appears on the printed page. Even our soundest data (the 1970 census) has some flaws in it other than being outdated. There are additional problem areas besides cold, hard numbers. Confusion as to the meaning of the categories was apparent during the review process which proceded the first publication of this document. Specifically, the confusion has revolved around census categories that are extremely similar but are actually different and thus conflicts in statistics develop. The explanation of the data sources section defines and references all the categories so that the reader can know the exact source of the data and better judge the quality and accuracy of the material.

It should be carefully noted that besides the federal and state data that could be considered relatively solid, there are necessary "gray areas" that call for estimates and judgments that we sought from the best possible sources available. The 1978 population figure and the components of change 1970-1978 in Section I represent such an estimate. The estimate is derived from facts delivered from the Idaho Bureau of Vital Statistics to U.S. Bureau of the Census who use a multiple regression equation which relates births, deaths, covered employment and school enrollment. The regression method is averaged with a component method to measure net migration. The county estimates are adjusted to the state total so that the totals agree.

Beginning in 1981, much of the socio-economic data from the 1980 census will become available. The Division of Economic and Community Affairs, State Library and Boise State University have signed an agreement with the Bureau of the Census to establish a State Census Data Center. It is anticipated that several detailed, statistical profiles can be generated based primarily on the various types of census data. This edition of County Profiles of Idaho is a necessary interim effort prior to the availability of new baseline data for Idaho.

Land use information prior to 1976 in Idaho was completely inadequate due to the high degree of inaccurate data. However, two significant studies were completed that year that filled a major void in this important planning component. In a cooperative study the U.S. Department of Agriculture published a report entitled, Snake River Basin, Idaho and Wyoming Cooperative Study - Land Resource Data. The land use categories used are forest, pasture and range, cropland, other land, and water. Additional information on cropland differentiated between dry and irrigated. Irrigated cropland was further defined to be either surface or sprinkler irrigation.

In 1976 the Division developed county land use statistics using the U.S. Geological Survey land use and land cover classification system. We believe that the data developed is an important alternative to the agriculturally-oriented data developed by USDA. The figures were developed from overlays tracing the land use areas on satellite (LANDSAT) imagery, then keyed to 1:250,000 maps. An electronic area calculator was used to compute the statistics. The average error in measuring has been estimated at slightly less than one percent. Smaller counties would generally have slightly higher error average than the larger counties.

Special note should be taken of Shoshone County. The large percentage of the urban and built-up category represents the heavy mining and dredging activities (built-up) rather than urban. Statewide, the important category of water was not always picked up by the LANDSAT imagery; therefore SCS information was used for the acres of water not visible on LANDSAT. Finally, while the USDA and our land use information is very comparable, the interpretation of the USDA categories of forest and pasture and range is quite often significantly different than our categories of rangeland and forest land. However, the totals of each classification system for these two categories are generally extremely close.

Major Federal land holdings besides the Forest Service and Bereau of Land Management are listed in the appendix of this publication. Very small holdings by such Federal agencies as the Navy, Postal Service, and Veterans Administration are not listed. Updated land ownership figures are provided for Forest Service and all State land holdings of Departments of Land, Fish and Game, and Parks and Recreation.

The majority of ratios, percentages and figures were developed by the appropriate source agencies. We did not feel it was proper to correct infrequent and small errors in these figures. We were also hesitant to add other information that may be available for a county but not for the others because of format problems that would result.

* In most cases the totals do not represent a universal number for the county. Only places issuing permits are recorded. Nationally this represents 80% of all new private housing. The data is best available and should reasonably reflect local housing trends. Demolition, abandonment, or conversion of housing is not included.

 Was not identified as a permit-issuing place at that time.

INTRODUCTION

Statistics represent useful data that can be compared, manipulated and interpreted into meaningful and necessary information for planning and decision making. Unfortunately, the statistical gathering and development process is not as cut and dried as it appears on the printed page. Even our soundest data, the decennial census, has some flaws in it. There are additional problem areas besides cold, hard numbers. Confusion as to the meaning of the categories often occurs. The explanation of indicator sources section defines and references all the categories so the reader can know the exact source of the data and better judge the quality and accuracy of the material.

It should be carefully noted that besides the federal and state data that could be considered relatively solid, there are necessary "gray areas" that call for estimates and judgments that we consider the best possible sources available.

Late in 1982 much of the socioeconomic data from the 1980 Census will become available. The Division of Economic & Community Affairs, State Library and Boise State University have signed an agreement with the Bureau of the Census to establish a State Census Data Center. It is anticipated that several detailed, statistical profiles can be generated based primarily on the various types of census data. This edition of County Profiles of Idaho is a necessary interim effort prior to the availability of new baseline data for Idaho.

In 1976 the Division developed county land use statistics using the U. S. Geological Survey land use and land cover classification system. The figures were developed from overlays tracing the land use areas on satellite (LANDSAT) imagery, then keyed to 1:250,000 maps. An electronic area calculator was used to compute the statistics. The average error in measuring has been estimated as slightly less than one percent. Smaller counties would generally have slightly higher error average than the larger counties.

Special note should be taken of Shoshone County. The large percentage of the urban and built up category represents the heavy mining and dredging activities (built up) rather than urban. Statewide, the important category of water was not always picked up by the LANDSAT imagery. Therefore, SCS information was used for the acres of water not visible on LANDSAT.

Major federal land holdings besides the Forest Service and Bureau of Land Management are listed in the appendix of this publication. Very small holdings by such federal agencies as the Navy, Postal Service and Veterans Administration are not listed.

The majority of ratios, percentages and figures were developed by the appropriate source agencies. We did not feel it was proper to correct infrequent and small errors in these figures. We were also hesitant to add other information that may be available for a county but not for the others because of format problems that would result.

1. County's Population as Percentage of the State Total - 1980

   Census Data: The 1980 official figure is from Final Population and Housing Unit Counts, PHC 80-V-14, Advanced Reports, 1980 Census of Population and Housing. Figure computed by dividing county population by the state population.

2. Population

   Census Data: Number of Inhabitants. Number for 1960 and 1970 found in Table 9 and correction note for Bonneville, Boundary and Jefferson Counties on page 14-6. The number for 1950 came from the 1960 version of Number of Inhabitants. The 1980 number is from PHC 80-V-14, Advanced Report.

3. Percent of Population Change - 1970-1980

   Census Data: The figure is from PHC 80-V-14, Advanced Report.
